

Stacy Velma is a Public Health Officer with expertise in community engagement and accountability and health promotion. She previously served as the Resource Mobilization Lead and Co-founder of ReproClimate Alliance CBO, where she played a key role in mobilizing resources, designing community-based interventions and advancing public health initiatives.

Passionate about equity in health service delivery, Stacy has a strong interest in advocating for Sexual and Reproductive Health and Rights (SRHR) among adolescents and women. At ReproClimate Alliance, she led the implementation of comprehensive sexuality education programs targeting both in-school and out-of-school adolescents. These interventions significantly improved access to sexual and reproductive health information, with over 90% of beneficiaries demonstrating increased awareness and knowledge of SRHR issues.

As part of her advocacy efforts, Stacy presented a concept paper to the Kisumu County Health Management Team on scaling up HIV prevention and teenage pregnancy reduction programs among adolescents. The proposal aimed to strengthen school health education and improve access to youth-friendly health services.

Committed to disease prevention, Stacy believes that community awareness and education are critical in addressing determinants of health and achieving better health outcomes. She is dedicated to empowering communities, promoting informed decision-making and advancing sustainable public health solutions.
