

Jackson Randu Unda is a Public Health Researcher and Monitoring and Evaluation professional with over five years of experience in health research, program implementation, and community engagement. He holds a Bachelor's degree in Population Health from Kenyatta University and is pursuing a Master of Public Health specializing in Monitoring and Evaluation at Pwani University.

Currently an Ecosystem Trainer at Tiko, Mr. Unda enhances access to sexual and reproductive health services by training healthcare providers and community health promoters. His experience includes working with organisations like KEMRI-Wellcome Trust, UNICEF, and the Kenya National Bureau of Statistics, where he honed his skills in research methodologies and health systems strengthening.

As the Founder and Chairperson of the Ujuzimali Empowerment Project, he focuses on equipping youth with entrepreneurship, leadership, and life skills. Mr. Unda also mentors young individuals and volunteers with Stowelink to support evidence-based public health initiatives and sustainable community development.
