

Clinical Officer | Clinical Medicine & Surgery | Public Health Advocate

My name is Veronicah Mumbi Kiiru, a qualified and licenced clinical officer by the clinical officers council of Kenya. I hold a Diploma in Clinical Medicine and Surgery from the Kenya Medical Training College(KMTC) and an additional certificate in Non-Communicable Diseases for Public Health. I have practicing experience in busy public and private hospitals and vast community health settings in Kenya where I have gained broad exposure to both clinical and public health practice.

My career spans emergency care, internal medicine, maternal, newborn and child health, minor surgery, communicable and non-communicable diseases management, family planning and counselling.

My core competencies include excellent clinical skills, impeccable patient assessment and diagnostics management skills which are augmented by critical and clinical thinking. I am an active team player with good interpersonal skills that help me work seamlessly.

I am driven by a commitment to quality patient outcomes, evidence-based care, and building stronger health systems from the ground up. Beyond my clinical practice, I am passionate about promotive and preventive health education and community sensitization, believing that lasting impact begins before patients reach the hospital door.

I am open and welcoming to opportunities that challenge me to grow, contribute positively and progressively to the society, and make a real difference in healthcare access and delivery.
